Judgement

R.S. Sarkaria, J.—Whether the proprietor of a cinema theatre holding a licence for exhibiting cinematograph films is entitled to invoke the certiorari jurisdiction ex debito justitiae to get a 'No-Objection Certificate', granted under Rule 6 of the Bombay Cinema Rules, 1954 for short, the Rules) by the District Magistrate in favour of a rival in the trade, brought up and quashed on the ground that it suffers from a defect of jurisdiction. is the principal question that falls to be determined in this appeal by special leave.

2. The circumstances giving rise to this appeal are as follows: Respondents 1 and 2 are owners of a site, bearing Survey No. 98 in the town of Mehmabad. They made an application under Rule 3 of the Rules to District Magistrate, Kaira. for the grant of a Certificate that there was no objection to the location of a cinema, theatre at this site. The District Magistrate then notified in the prescribed form, the substance of the application by publication in newspapers, inviting objections to the grant of a No-Objection Certificate. In response thereto, several persons lodged objections, but the appellants who are the proprietors of a cinema house, situated on Station Road, Mehmabad, were not among those objectors. Some of the objections were that a Muslim graveyard, a Durgah, a compost depot, a school and public latrines were situated in the vicinity of the proposed site.

3. The District Magistrate (Res. 3 herein) invited the opinions of the Chairman of Nagar Panchayat, Executive Engineer Roads and Buildings. and the District Superintendent of Police. These three authorities opined that they had no objection to the grant of the Certificate applied for. The District Magistrate visited the site on 27-7-1970. Thereafter he submitted a report to the State Government (Res. 4) that the proposed site was not fit for the location of a cinema house. He recommended that the 'No-Objection Certificate' should be refused. The State Government did not agree with the recommendation of the District Magistrate and directed the latter to grant the Certificate. Accordingly, the District Magistrate granted the 'No-Objection Certificate' on 27-11-1970 to Res. 1 and 2.

4. On 16-12-1970. the appellants filed a writ petition in the High Court under Articles 226/227 of the Constitution praying for the issuance of a writ of certiorari, Mandamus, or any other appropriate writ or order directing the Respondents to treat the No-Objection Certificate granted to Respondents 1 and 2 as illegal, void and ineffectual. They further asked for an injunction restraining Respondents 1 and 2 from utilising the certificate for the purpose of building a cinema theatre.

5. The main grounds of challenge were: that the impugned Certificate had been issued by the District Magistrate, not in the exercise of his own discretion, with due regard to the principles indicated in the Bombay Cinemas Regn. Act, 1953 (for short, the Act) and the Rules, but mechanically at the dictates of the State Government; that Rules 5 and 6, according to an earlier judgment of the High Court being ultra vires and void, the Government had no power to grant or refuse the No-Objection Certificate; that such power belonged to the District Magistrate who was the Licensing Authority and had to be exercised by him objectively, in a quasi-judicial manner in accordance with the statutory principles; since it was not so exercised, the grant of the Certificate in question suffer from lack of jurisdiction.

6. In the affidavit filed in reply, by the District Magistrate (on behalf of Respondents 3 and 4). preliminary objection was taken that the appellants had no locus standi to file the writ petition because their rights were not in any manner affected by the grant of the 'No-objection Certificate'. It was stated that the deponent had reported the case and submitted the records to the State Government under Rule 5, recommending that on account of the location of a graveyard, a church, a temple, a mosque and a school near the proposed site, the no-objection certificate be refused. It was admitted that on receipt of the order of the State Government he granted the No-Objection Certificate to Respondents 1 and 2 in compliance with the Government's directive.

7. The High Court, purporting to rely on this Court's decision in State of Gujarat

Vs. Krishna Cinema and Others, and an earlier decision of its own in Kishore Chander Ratilal v. State of Gujarat Spl. Civil Appln. No. 912 of 1970, Decided by Gujarat High Court on 27-11-1970 reported in ILR (1971) Guj. 513 held that Rule 5 (2) in its entirety and the words "the previous permission of the Government obtained under Rule 5" in Rule 6 being ultra vires and invalid, have to be ignored as nonest, with the result that the District Magistrate had to come to his own conclusion on relevant considerations and objective norms whether a No-objection Certificate should be granted or refused; that under the Act the District Magistrate - and not the Government - is the Licensing Authority and he was bound to exercise this power, which is an integral part of the process of licensing, in a quasi judicial manner; that since the District Magistrate exercised this power not on his own in accordance with objective principles but solely at the dictates of the Government, his act in granting the No-Objection Certificate suffers from a patent lack of jurisdiction.

8. The High Court, however, dismissed the writ petition on the ground that no right vested in the appellant had been infringed, or prejudiced or adversely affected as a direct consequence of the order impugned by him and as such, he was not an 'aggrieved person' having a locus standi in the matter.

9. Mr. Sen appearing for the appellant, assails the finding of the High Court in regard to the locus standi of the appellant to maintain the writ petition. The burden of his arguments is that apart from a right in common with the general public to object to the grant before the District Magistrate, the appellant was a rival in the same trade and, as such, had a particular interest to see that permission was not granted to another, in contravention of law, to start the same business; consequently the illegal grant of the No-Objection Certificate had prejudicially affected the commercial interest of the appellant who stood in the category of an 'aggrieved person' entitled to a writ of certiorari ex debito justitiae. It is submitted that so far as certiorari is concerned, the concept of 'aggrieved person' is very wide and is not confined to a person who is grieved by an invasion of a legal right vested in him. Anyone - says Mr. Sen - who is personally interested and genuinely grieved by an act of usurpation of jurisdiction or lack of Jurisdiction on the part of an administrative tribunal or body, would fall within the category of an 'aggrieved person', even if such usurpation or lack of jurisdiction had not resulted in infringement of a legal right or legal interest vested in him; nor would such a person be denied locus standi for the purpose of certiorari merely because he had not lodged any objection or joined the proceedings before the tribunal (District Magistrate, in the present case). In these premises, it is maintained, the High Court was not justified in denying the remedy of certiorari to the appellant. Counsel has cited a number of decisions, mostly of the English Courts, in support of his contention.

10. Article 226 of the Constitution empowers the High Court to issue to any person or authority, including the Government, within its territorial jurisdiction, directions, orders or writs, including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari for the enforcement of fundamental rights and for any other purpose.

11. As explained by this Court in Dwarka Nath Vs. Income Tax Officer, Special Circle D-ward, Kanpur and Another, the founding fathers of the Constitution have designedly couched the article in comprehensive phraseology to enable the High Court to reach injustice wherever it is found. In a sense, the scope and nature of the power conferred by the Article is wider than that exercised by the writ courts in England. However, the adoption of the nomenclature of English writs, with the prefix "nature of" superadded, indicates that the general principles grown over the years in the English Courts, can. shorn of technical procedural restriction and adapted to the social conditions of this vast country, in so far as they do not conflict with any provision of the Constitution, or the law declared by this Court, be usefully considered in directing the exercise of this discretionary jurisdiction in accordance with well-recognised rules of practice.

12. According to most English decisions, in order to have the locus standi to invoke certiorari jurisdiction, the petitioner should be an "aggrieved person" and in a case of defect of jurisdiction, such a petitioner will be entitled to a writ of certiorari as a matter of course, but if he does not fulfil that character and is a "stranger", the Court will, in its discretion, deny him this extraordinary remedy, save in very special circumstances. This takes us to the further question: Who is an "aggrieved person"? And what are the qualifications requisite for such a status? The expression "aggrieved person" denotes an elastic, and, to an extent, an elusive concept. It cannot be confined within the bounds of a rigid, exact and comprehensive definition. At best, its feature can be described a broad tentative manner. Its scope and meaning depends on diverse, variable factors such as the content and intent of the statute of which contravention is alleged, the specific circumstances of the case, the nature and extent of the petitioner's interest and the. nature and extent of the prejudice or injury suffered by him. English Courts have sometimes put a restricted and sometimes a wide construction on the expression "aggrieved person". However, some general tests have been devised to ascertain whether an applicant is eligible for this category so as to have the necessary locus standi or 'standing' to invoke certiorari jurisdiction.

13. We will first take up that line of cases in which an "aggrieved person" has been held to be one who has a more particular or peculiar interest of his own beyond that of the general public, in seeing that the law is properly administered. The leading case in this line is (1870) 5 QB 466 Queen v. Justices of Surrey decided as far back as 1870. There, on the application by the highway board the Justices made certificates that certain portion of three road were unnecessary. As a result, it was ordered that the roads should cease to be repaired by the parishes.

14. E. an inhabitant of one of the parishes. and living in the neighborhood of the roads, obtained a rule for a certiorari to bring up the orders and certificates for the purpose of quashing them on the ground that they were void by reason of the notices not having been affixed at the places required by law. On the point of locus standi (following an earlier decision of Rex v. Taunton St. Mary (1815) 3 M & S 465, the Court held that though a certiorari is not a writ of course, yet as the applicant had by reason of his local situation a peculiar grievance of his own and was not merely applying as one of the public, he was entitled to the writ ex debito justitiae.

15. It is to be noted that in this case E was living in the neighbourhood of the roads which were to be abandoned as a result of the certificates issued by the Justices, He would have suffered special inconvenience by the abandonment. Thus E had shown a particular grievance of his own beyond some inconveniences suffered by the general public. He had a right to object to the grant of the Certificate. Non-publication of the notice at all the places in accordance with law had seriously prejudiced him in the exercise of that legal right.

16. The ratio of the decision in Queen v. Justices of Surrey was followed in King v. Groom; Ex Parte (1901) 2 KB 157. There, the parties were rivals in the liquor trade. The applicants (brewers) had persistently objected to the jurisdiction of the Justices to grant the license to one J. K. White in a particular month. It was held that the applicants had a sufficient interest in the matter to enable them to invoke certiorari jurisdiction.

17. A distinguishing feature of this case was that unlike the appellants in the present case who did not despite public notice, raise any objection before the District Magistrate to the grant of the No-Objection Certificate, the brewers were persistently raising objections in proceedings before the Justices at every stage. The law gave them a right to object and to see that the licensing was done in accordance with law. They were seriously prejudiced in the exercise of that right by the act of usurpation of jurisdiction on the part of the Justices.

18. The rule in Groom's case (1901) 2 KB 157 was followed in the King v. Richmond Confirming Authority, Ex parte Howitt (1921) 1 KB 248. There also, the applicant for a certiorari was a rival in the liquor trade. It is significant that in coming to the conclusion that the applicant was a 'person aggrieved' Earl of Reading C.J. laid stress on the fact that he had appeared and objected before the Justices and joined issue with them though unsuccessfully, "in the sense that they said they had jurisdiction when he said they had not".

19. In R. Thames Magistrate's Court Ex parte Greenbaum (1957) 55 LGR 129 extracted in Yardley's book of English Administrative Law. 2nd Edn.atp.228, were two traders in Goulston St. Stepney. One of them was Gritzman who held a license to trade on pitch No. 4 for 5 days in the week and pitch No. 8 for the other two days. The other was Greenbaum. who held a licence to sell on Pitch No. 8 for two days of the week and pitch No. 10 for the other days of the week. A much better pitch, pitch No. 2, in Goulston St became vacant. Thereupon, both Gritzman and Greenbaum applied for the grant of a licence, each wanted to give up his own existing licence and get a new licence for pitch No. 2-The Borough Council considered and decided in favour of Greenbaum and refused Gritzman who was left with his pitches 4 and 8.

20. Gritzman appealed to the Magistrate. He could not appeal against the grant of a licence to Greenbaum, but only against the refusal to grant a licence to himself. Before the Magistrate, the Borough Council opposed him. The Magistrate held that the Council were wrong to refuse the licence of pitch No. 2 to Gritzman. The Council thereupon made out a licence for Gritzman for pitch No. 2 and wrote to Greenbaum saying that this licence had been wrongly issued. Greenbaum made an application for certiorari to court. The court held that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. An objection was taken that Greenbaum had no locus standi. Rejecting the contention, Lord Denning observed:

I should have thought that in this case Greenbaum was certainly a person aggrieved and not a stranger.

He was affected by the Magistrate's orders because the Magistrate ordered another person to be put on his pitch. It is a proper case for the intervention of the court by means of certiorari.

21. It is to be noted that the Council had duly allotted pitch No. 2 to Greenbaum in the exercise of their administrative power. The Magistrate's order pursuant to which the Council cancelled the allotment and re-allotted that pitch to Gritzman, was without jurisdiction. By this illegal cancellation and reallocation Greenbaum's interest to trade on pitch No. 2, which had been duly licensed out to him, was directly and prejudicially affected by the impugned action.

22. R. v. Manchester Legal Aid Committee (1952) 2 QB. 413 is another case belonging to this group. It was held that the applicants therein were "persons aggrieved" because they were grieved by the failure of the Legal Aid Committee to give them prior notice and hearing to which they were entitled under Regulation 15 (2). Thus it could be said that they had suffered a legal wrong.

23. In Regina v. Liverpool Corporation, Ex parte Liverpool Taxi Fleet Operators' Association (1972) 2 Q.B. 299 the City Council in exercise of its powers under the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, limited the number of licenses to be issued for hackney carriages to 300. The Council gave an undertaking to the associations representing the 300 existing license holders not to increase the number of such license holders above 300 for a certain period. The Council, disregarding this undertaking, resolved to increase the number. An Association representing the existing license-holders moved the Queen's Bench for leave to apply for orders of Prohibition, Mandamus and Certiorari. The Division Bench refused. In the Court of Appeal, allowing the Association's appeal, Lord Denning M. R. observed at pp. 308, 309:

The Taxicab Owners' Association come to this Court for relief and I think we should give it to them. The writs of prohibition and certiorari lie on behalf of any person who is a "person aggrieved" and that includes any person whose interests may be prejudicially affected by what is taking place. It does not include a mere busybody who is interfering in things which do not concern him; but it includes any person who has a genuine grievance because something has been done or may be done which affects him: See Attorney-General of the Gambia v. N' Jie (1961) AC 617 and Maurice v. London County Council (1964) 2 QB 362,. The Taxicab Owners' Association here have certainly a locus standi to apply for relief.

24. It may be noted that in this case, the whole question turned on the effect in law of the undertaking and whether the applicants had been treated fairly.

25. Emphasising the "very special circumstances" of the case, the court read into the statute, a duty to act fairly in accordance with the principles of natural justice. Thus, a corresponding right to be treated fairly was also imported by implication, in favour of the applicants. Viewed from this standpoint, the applicants had an interest recognised in law, which was adversely affected by the impugned action. They had suffered a wrong as a result of the unfair treatment on the part of the corporation.

26. In Regina v. Paddington Valuation Officer, Ex Parte Peachy Property Corpn. Ltd. (1966) 1 QB 380 ratepayers were held to have the locus standi to apply for certiorari, notwithstanding the fact that it could not be said that the actual burdens to be borne by the applicants fell more heavily on them than on other members of the local community.

27. In Bar Council of Maharashtra Vs. M.V. Dabholkar and Others, a Bench of seven learned Judges of this Court considered the Question whether the Bar Council of a State was a 'person aggrieved' to maintain an appeal u/s 38 of the Advocates' Act, 1961. Answering the question in the affirmative, this Court, speaking through Ray C.J. indicated how the expression "person aggrieved" is to be interpreted in the context of a statute, thus:

The meaning of the words "a person, aggrieved" may vary according to the context of the statute. One of the meanings is that a person will be held to be aggrieved by a decision if that decision is materially adverse to him. Normally, one is required to establish that one has been denied or deprived of something to which one is legally entitled in order to make one "a person aggrieved". Again a person is aggrieved if a legal burden is imposed on him. The meaning of the words "a person aggrieved" is sometimes given a restricted meaning in certain statutes which provide remedies for the protection of private legal rights. The restricted meaning requires denial or deprivation of legal rights. A more liberal approach is required in the background of statutes which do not deal with property rights but deal with professional conduct and morality. The role of the Bar Council under the Advocates' Act is comparable to the role of a guardian in professional ethics. The words "person aggrieved" in Sections 37 and 38 of the Act are of wide import and should not be subjected to a restricted interpretation of possession or denial of legal rights or burdens or financial interests.

28. In Rex v. Butt Ex Parte Brooke (1922) 38 TLR 537 a person who was merely a resident of the town, was held entitled to apply for certiorari. Similar is the decision in Regina v. Brighton Borough Justices Ex Parte Jarvis (1954) 1 WLR 203.

29. Typical of the cases in which a strict construction was put on the expression "person aggrieved", is Buxton v. Minister of Housing and Local Govt. (1961) 1 QB 278. There, an appeal by a Company against the refusal of the Local Planning Authority of permission to develop land owned by the Company by digging chalk, was allowed by the Minister. Owners of adjacent property applied to the High Court u/s 31(1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1959 to quash the decision of the Minister on the ground that the proposed operations by the company would injure their land and that they were 'persons aggrieved' by the action of the Minister. It was held that the expression 'person aggrieved' in a statute meant a person who had suffered a legal grievance; anyone given the right u/s 37 of the Act of 1959 to have his representation considered by the Minister was a person aggrieved, thus Section 31 applied, If those rights were infringed; but the applicants had no right under the statute and no legal rights had been infringed and therefore they were not entitled to challenge the Minister's decision, Salmon J. quoted with approval these observations of James LJ in Re Sidebotham (1880) 14 Ch D. 458 .

The words 'person aggrieved' do not really mean a man who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some other order had been made. A 'person aggrieved' must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something.

30. Ex Parte Stott (1916) 1 KB 7 is another illustration of a person who had no legal grievance, nor had he sufficient interest in the matter. A licensing authority under the Cinematograph Act, 1901, granted to a theatre proprietor a licence for the exhibition of cinematograph films at his theatre. The license was subject to the condition that the licensee should not exhibit any film if he had notice that the licensing authority objected to it. A firm who had acquired the sole right of exhibition of a certain film in the district in which the theatre was situated entered into an agreement with the licensee for the exhibition of the film at his theatre. The licensing authority having given notice to the licensee that it is objected to the exhibition of the film, the firm applied for a writ of certiorari to bring up the notice to be quashed on the ground that the condition attached to the licence was unreasonable and void and that they were aggrieved by the notice as being destructive of their property. It was held that whether the condition was unreasonable or not, the applicants were not persons who were aggrieved by the notice and had no locus standi to maintain the application.

31. Similarly, in King v. Middlesex Justices" (1832) 37 RR 594 : 3 B & Ad 938 it was held that the words "person who shall think himself aggrieved" appearing in the statute governing the grant of licenses to innkeepers mean a person immediately aggrieved as by refusal of a licence to himself and not one who is consequently aggrieved and that though the Justices had granted a licence to a party to open a public house not before licensed, within a very short distance of a licensed public house, the occupier of the latter house could not appeal against such grant.

32. Other instances of a restricted interpretation of the expression "person aggrieved" are furnished by R. v. Bradford-on-Avon Urban District Council; Ex Parte Boulton (1964) 2 All ER 492; Gregory v. Cam-den London Borough Council (1966) 1 WLR 899; R v. London O.S ; Ex parte Westminster Corporation (1951) 2 KB 508; Regina v. Cardiff Justices; Ex parte Cardiff Corporation (1962) 2 QB 436.

33. This Court has laid down in a number of decisions that in order to have the locus standi to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226. an applicant should ordinarily be one who has & personal or individual right in the subject-matter of the application, though in the case of some of the writs like habeas corpus or quo warranto this rule is relaxed or modi-; fled. In other words, as a general rule, infringement of some legal right or prejudice to some legal interest inhering in the petitioner is necessary to give him a locus standi in the matter-(See The State of Orissa Vs. Madan Gopal Rungta, ; The Calcutta Gas Company (Proprietary) Ltd. Vs. The State of West Bengal and Others, Ram Umeshwari Suthoo v. Member, Board of Revenue Orissa (1967) 1 SCA 413; Godde Venkateswara Rao Vs. Government of Andhra Pradesh and Others, ; State of Orissa and Others Vs. Rajasaheb Chandanmull Indrakumar (P) Ltd. and Others, Dr. Satyanarayana Sinha Vs. S. Lal and Company (P) Ltd.,

34. The expression "ordinarily" indicates that this is not a cast-iron rule. It is flexible enough to take in those cases where the applicant has been prejudicially affected by an act or omission of an authority, even though he has no proprietary or even a fiduciary interest in the subject-matter. That apart, in exceptional cases even a stranger or a person who was not a party to the proceedings before the authority, but has a substantial and genuine interest in the subject-matter of the proceedings will be covered by this rule. The principles enunciated in the English cases noticed above, are not inconsistent with it.

35. In the United States of America, also, the law on the point is substantially the same. "No matter how seriously infringement of the Constitution may be called into question," said Justice Frankfurter in Coleman v. Miller (1939) 307 US 433 'this is not the tribunal for its challenge except by those who have some specialized interest of their own to vindicate apart from a political concern which belongs to all'. To have a "standing to sue", which means locus standi to ask for relief in a court independently of a statutory remedy, the plaintiff must show that he is injured, that is, subjected to or threatened with a legal wrong. Courts can intervene only where legal rights are invaded Chapman v. Sheridan Wyoming Coal Co. (1949) 338 US 621. "Legal wrong" requires a judicially enforceable right " and the touchstone to justiciability is injury to a legally protected right. A nominal or a highly speculative adverse effect American Jurisprudence Vol. 2d Ss. 575. p. 334 Joint Anti Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGarth (1950) 341 US

123; on the interest or right of a person has been held to be insufficient to give him the "standing to sue" for judicial review of administrative action. United States Cane Sugar Refiners' Assn. v. McNutt 138 F 2d 116 - 158 ALR 849; Again the "adverse effect" requisite for "standing to sue" must be an "illegal effect" United States v. Storer Broadcasting Co. (1955) 351 US 192 Thus. in the undermentioned cases, it was held that injury resulting from lawful competition not being a legal wrong, cannot furnish a "standing to sue" for judicial relief. Kansas City Power & Light Co. v. McKay (1955) 350 US 884;

36. It will be seen that in the context of locus standi to apply for a writ of certiorari, an applicant may ordinarily fall in any of these categories: (i) 'person aggrieved'; (ii) 'stranger'; (iii) busybody of meddlesome interloper. Persons in the last category are easily distinguishable from those coming under the first two categories. Such persons interfere in things which do not concern them. They masquerade as crusaders for justice. They pretend to act in the name of Pro Bono Publico, though they have no interest of the public or even of their own to protect. They indulge in the past time of meddling with the judicial process either by force of habit or from improper motives. Often, they are actuated by a desire to win notoriety or cheap popularity; while the ulterior intent of some applicants in this category, may be no more than spoking the wheels of administration. The High Court should do well to reject the applications of such busybodies at the threshold.

37. The distinction between the first and second categories of applicants, though real, is not always well-demarcated. The first category has, as it were, two concentric zones; a solid central zone of certainty, and, a grey outer circle of lessening certainty in a sliding centrifugal scale, with an outermost nebulous fringe of uncertainty. Applicants falling within the central zone are those whose legal rights have been infringed. Such applicants undoubtedly stand in the category of 'persons aggrieved'. In the grey outer-circle the bounds which separate the first category from the second, intermix, interfuse and overlap increasingly in a centrifugal direction. All persons in this outer-zone may not be "persons aggrieved"

38. To distinguish such applicants from 'strangers', among them, some broad tests may be deduced from the conspectus made above. These tests are not absolute and ultimate. Their efficacy varies according to the circumstances of the case, including the statutory context in which the matter falls to be considered. These are: Whether the applicant is a person whose legal right has been infringed? Has he suffered a legal wrong or injury, in the sense, that his interest, recognised by law, has been prejudicially and directly affected by the act or omission of the authority, complained of? Is he a person who has suffered a legal grievance, a person "against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something? Has he a special and substantial grievance of his own beyond some grievance or inconvenience suffered by him in common with the rest of the public? Was he entitled to object and be heard by the authority before it took the impugned action? If so, was he prejudicially affected in the exercise of that right by the act of usurpation of jurisdiction on the part of the authority? Is the statute, in the context of which the scope of the words "person aggrieved" is being considered, a social welfare measure designed to lay down ethical or professional standards of conduct for the community? Or is it a statute dealing with private rights of particular Individuals?

39. Now let us apply these tests to the case in hand. The Act and the Rules with which we are concerned, are not designed to set norms of moral or professional conduct for the community at large or even a section thereof. They only regulate the exercise of private rights of an Individual to carry on a particular business on his property. In this context, the expression "person aggrieved" must receive a strict construction.

40. Did the appellant have a legal right under the statutory provisions or under the general law which has been subjected to or threatened with injury? The answer at the circumstances of the case must necessarily be in the negative.

41. The Act and the Rules do not confer any substantive justiciable right on a rival in cinema trade, apart from the option, in common with the rest of the public, to lodge an objection in response to the notice published under Rule 4. The appellants did not avail of this option. He did not lodge any objection in response to the notice, the due publication of which was not denied. No explanation has been given as to why he did not prefer any objection to the grant of the No-Objection-Certificate before the District Magistrate or the Government. Even if he had objected before the District Magistrate and failed, the Act would not give him a right of appeal. Section 8A of the Act confers a right of appeal to the State Government, only on any person aggrieved by an order of a licensing authority refusing to grant a license, or revoking or suspending any licence u/s 8. Obviously, the appellant was not a "person aggrieved" within the contemplation of Section 8A,

42. Section 8B of the Act provides that the State Government may either of its own motion, or upon an application made by "an aggrieved person" call for and examine the record of any order made by a licensing, authority under this Act. and pass such order thereon as it thinks just and proper. Assuming that the scope of the words "aggrieved person" in Section 8B is wider than the ambit of the same words as used in Section 8A, then also, the appellant cannot in the circumstances of this case, be regarded as a "person aggrieved" having the requisite legal capacity to invoke certiorari jurisdiction.

43. The Act and the Rules recognise a special interest of persons residing, or concerned with any institution such as a school, temple, mosque etc. located within a distance of 200 yards of the site on which a cinema house is proposed to be constructed. The appellant does not fall within the category of such persons having a special interest in the locality. It is not his case that his cinema house is situated anywhere near the site in question, or that he has any peculiar interest in his personal, fiduciary or representative capacity in any School, Temple etc. situated in the vicinity of the said site. It cannot therefore be said that the appellant is "a person aggrieved" on account of his having a particular and substantial interest of his own in the subject-matter of the litigation, beyond the general interest of the public. Moreover the appellant could not be said to have been, in fact, grieved. As already noticed, he despite adequate opportunity, never lodged any objection with the District Magistrate, nor went in revision before the State Government. Thus the present case is not in line with the decision which are within the ratio of Queen v. Justices of Surrey. 1870-5 QB 466 .

44. Having seen that the appellant has no standing to complain of injury, actual or potential, to any statutory right or interest, we pass on to consider whether any of his rights or interests, recognised by the general law has been infringed as a result of the grant of No Objection Certificate to the respondents? Here, again, the answer must be in the negative.

45. In Paragraph 7 of the writ petition, he has stated his cause of action, thus:

The petitioner submits that he owns a cinema theatre in Mehmabad which has about a small population of 15000 persons as stated above and there is no scope for more than one cinema theatre in the town. He has, therefore, a commercial interest in seeing to it that other persons are not granted a no-objection certificate in violation of law.

46. Thus, in substance, the appellant's stand is that the setting up of a rival cinema house in the town will adversely affect his, monopolistic commercial interest, causing pecuniary harm and loss of business from competition. Such harm or loss is not wrongful in the eye of law, because it does not result in injury to a legal right or a legally protected, interest, the business competition causing it being a lawful activity. Juridical, harm of this description is called damnum sine injuria, the term injuria being here used in its true sense of an act contrary to law.¹ The reason why the law suffers a person knowingly to inflict harm of this description on another, without holding him accountable for it, is that such harm done to an individual is a gain to society at large.

47. In the light of the above discussion, it is demonstrably clear that the appellant has not been denied or deprived of a legal right. He has not sustained injury to any legally protected interest. In fact, the impugned order does not operate as a decision against him, much less does it wrongfully affect his title to something. He has not been subjected to a legal wrong. He has suffered no legal grievance. He has no legal peg for a justiciable claim to hang on. Therefore he is not a 'person aggrieved' and has no locus standi to challenge the grant of the No Objection Certificate.

48. It is true that in the ultimate analysis, the jurisdiction under Article 226 in general and certiorari in particular is discretionary. But in a country like India where writ petitions are instituted in the High Courts by the thousand, many of them frivolous, a strict ascertainment, at the outset, of the standing of the petitioner to invoke this extraordinary jurisdiction, must be insisted upon. The broad guidelines indicated by us, coupled with other well-established self-devised rules of practice, such as the availability of an alternative remedy, the conduct of the petitioner etc. can go a long way to help the courts in weeding out a large number of writ petitions at the initial stage with consequent saving of public time and money.

49. While a Procrustean approach should be avoided, as a rule, the Court should not interfere at the instance of a 'stranger' unless there are exceptional circumstances involving a grave miscarriage of justice having an adverse impact on public interests. Assuming that the appellant is a 'stranger' and not a busybody, then also there are no exceptional circumstances in the present case which would justify the issue of a writ of certiorari at his instance. On the contrary, the result of the exercise of these discretionary powers, in his favour, will, on balance, be against public policy. It will eliminate healthy competition in this business which is so essential to raise commercial morality; it will tend to perpetuate the appellant's monopoly of cinema business in the town; and above all. it will in effect, seriously injure the fundamental rights of respondents 1 and 2. which they have under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution, to carry on trade or business subject to 'reasonable restrictions imposed by law'.

50. The instant case falls well-nigh within the ratio of this Court's decision in The Nagar Rice and Flour Mills and Others Vs. N. Teekappa Gowda and Bros. and Others, wherein it was held that a rice mill-owner has no locus standi to challenge under Article 226, the setting up of a new rice-mill by another - even if such setting up be in contravention of Section 8(3) (c) of the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958 - because no right vested in such an applicant is infringed.

51. For all the foregoing reasons, we are of opinion that the appellant had no locus standi to invoke this special jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution. Accordingly, we answer the question posed at the commencement of this judgment, in the negative and on that ground, without entering upon the merits of the case, dismiss this appeal with costs.
